

1993 Easter Egg Hunt

Monday, April 12, 1993

The Daily Editor

Promo group hosts annual egg hunt

A NEW FRIEND—At left, Two-year-old Vincent Knuth was pretty impressed by the size of this stuffed Easter Bunny. It was given out as one of the prizes for finding hidden eggs at Schoharie Elementary Saturday morning. BELOW, Megan Loucks, age 2 1/2 of Schoharie, hangs on to the Easter Bunny at the Schoharie Promotional Association's annual egg hunt at the school.

6-Times-Journal, April 14, 1993

Let's go—On the word from the starter, Schoharie youngsters sprint from the starting line—almost in step—at the start of the Schoharie

Promotional Association's annual Easter egg hunt Saturday at the elementary school.

Youngsters stampede for Schoharie eggs

A window of about 10 minutes in Saturday's on-and-off rain was all the time kids needed to round up more than 200 eggs in Schoharie.

The Schoharie Promotional Association's annual Easter egg hunt think the threatening skies may have kept a few away. We had enough for 250, at least 200 showed up.

Kids sprinted from the starting line to scour the playground while hunters check out the prizes before ter egg hunt.

A window of about 10 minutes in Saturday's on-and-off rain was all the time kids needed to round up more than 200 eggs in Schoharie.

The Schoharie Promotional Association's annual Easter egg hunt at the elementary school brought the usual frantic searching, and—also as usual—candy for everyone.

"It went very well," said Association President Cappy Santos. "I think the threatening skies may have kept a few away. We had enough for 250, at least 200 showed up."

Kids sprinted from the starting line to scour the playground while association members kept them out of the wet, low-lying areas where there were no eggs.

For the first round, the egg-hunters were limited to one plastic egg each, which they returned for candy and coupons from McDonald's and Burger King. All children won candy and the coupons.

The kids were later turned loose again to find the remaining eggs.

Some of the eggs won special prizes, including stuffed animals and larger chocolate bunnies.

The association purchased the prizes through its membership dues, Mrs. Santos said.

This was the association's eighth annual egg hunt. The association also hosts annual Halloween and Christmas parties for kids.

Winners—Dressed for the holiday and the weather, cousins Danielle Loucks, left, and Megan Loucks wait patiently to exchange their plastic eggs for prizes at the egg hunt.

Happy Easter—Schoharie Promotional Association President Cappy Santos distributes prizes and coupons at the end of the egg hunt.